ABSTRACT

Intended for use by Title I reading teachers, this handbook is designed to aid in answering questions about the selection and use of instructional materials. The handbook lists materials according to the following skill areas: (1) auditory discrimination, (2) comprehension, (3) critical thinking, (4) dictionary skills; (5) fine motor skills, (6) independent reading, (7) language development, (8) listening skills, (9) perceptual development, (10) phonics, (11) reading rate, (12) readiness, (13) reading programs, (14) structural analysis skills, (15) study skills, (16) visual discrimination, and (17) vocabulary. In addition, the handbook contains descriptions of all the materials listed, including information about the skills covered in each item described, publisher, interest and instructional levels, price, and whether the material is consumable. A list of publishers of instructional materials concludes the handbook. (FL)

FORWARD

At the present time there are more commerical materials available for teaching reading than in years past. Magazines and professional periodicals are filled with ads describing games, machines, books and all sorts of other materials that can be used to aid the reading teacher in teaching her students to read. With so much commerical material at hand, the reading teacher is faced with the problem of deciding WHAT to purchase. In making this decision, certain questions need to be considered.

1. What materials are available that will meet the specific needs of the students?
2. For what specific reading skills can the material be used in teaching?
3. How much does the material cost?
4. For what grade level and/or interest level can the material be used?
5. Is the material consumable or nonconsumable?

This handbook was designed to aid reading teachers in answering the questions listed above. The list of materials included in this handbook is by no means complete, however, every effort was made to describe as many as possible. Furthermore, it was not intended that this handbook reflect judgements of the materials, but rather it was designed to provide the reading teacher with information needed in selecting materials appropriate for his students.
